ONE of South America's greatest liberators and most famous hero was Simon Bolivar. In fact, he may be called the George Washington of Colombia, Venezuela, Ecuador, Bolivia and Peru, for it was his guiding genius which was instrumental in bringing about their independence. He fought for more that 10 years against the Spanish rulers in the cause of independence and in the beginning was defeated time and time again, only to spring up again at another place with a new army. As his fame grew, so did his armies and it was not long before the tide of battle turned in his favor. He defeated one Spanish army after another and in 1824 at Ayacucho, Peru, he won a decisive victory which broke the power of Spain in South America.

Simon Bolivar was born in Caracas, Venezuela in 1783, of noble parents who sent him to Spain for an education. While in Europe he was an eye-witness to some of the scenes of the French Revolution. On his trip home, he stopped in the United States where he observed the workings of a free and independent government. When Bolivar arrived in Caracas in 1810, it was not long before he became a promoter for the independence of Venezuela. From that time on, he devoted the rest of his life to the cause of liberty and independence. Bolivar became the first president of Colombia which at that time consisted of the former Spanish provinces of Venezuela, Ecuador and New Granada (Colombia) which were united into a greater Colombia. Additional honors were bestowed upon him when the former Spanish province of Upper Peru which he liberated, proclaimed itself the Republic of Bolivia.

Most of the stamps of Venezuela, and a good many of those of Colombia, Bolivia, Peru and Ecuador, have Bolivar's portrait on the designs.

BUILD A BETTER MOUSE TRAP

ELLEN rose impatiently from the sofa, hurried into the kitchen, checked her watch with the electric clock there, and walked resignedly back to the living room.

Wilbur was late again! Undeniably late! He was supposed to have been at Ellen's house promptly at seven-thirty, and here it was eight o'clock—with still no sign of Wilbur! This made the fifteenth time in as many dates that Wilbur had been late—late, that is, Ellen amended, if he hadn't forgotten about their movie date altogether. If he had, she'd simply never see him again. After all, there was a limit to a girl's good disposition.

But at the thought of never seeing Wilbur again, Ellen's heart softened. Life without Wilbur would be too dull for words! But what could she do? This couldn't go on forever.

Perhaps she should phone Wilbur and make sure he hadn't forgotten. She'd certainly known him long enough to call him in a case like this. But no, she argued with herself, there was no real reason why she should. He should have remembered himself, and he had to learn his lesson sometime.

A new thought struck Ellen. Maybe Wilbur had met with some horrible accident and hadn't been able to call her. Ellen jumped up and ran to the phone in the hall.

Wilbur's mother answered at the other end. "Mrs. Waldron." Ellen blurted out, "is anything wrong with Wilbur? He was supposed to be over here a half hour ago, and I just had the most horrible feeling that something might have happened."

"Why, no, Ellen," Mrs. Waldron's voice soothed, "Wilbur is still downstairs in his shop. He was working on something new, and he said he wanted to add a few finishing touches to it before he left."

Ellen was silent. "Would you like to speak to him?" Mrs. Waldron asked.

"Please," Ellen gritted through clenched teeth.

A few seconds later Wilbur was speaking. "Ellen," he said, "how nice of you to call!"

"Oh, any time!" Ellen returned sarcastically. "Especially any time that you're late for a date. It happens so infrequently, you know."

There was an embarrassed pause at the other end. "Why, Ellen," Wilbur sounded like a wounded puppy, "I was just on my way over. I don't have a clock in the cellar, and I guess time goes by pretty fast when I'm . . ."

"I know," Ellen said coldly, "when you're inventing some more of your crazy gadgets." She took a deep breath. "Good-bye, Wilbur." And she hung up.

Five minutes later Wilbur was ringing Ellen's door bell (his house was just around the corner from Ellen's) and Ellen, much against her better judgment, opened the door for him. The thought of life without Wilbur still haunted her. But she was determined not to be too lenient. She stared at Wilbur with stern accusation in her eyes.

Wilbur didn't seem to notice. "I'm sorry I'm late, Ellen," he said lightly, "but wait till you see the invention I'm working on. Then you'll understand. It's a new simplified telephone connecting my bedroom with my workshop, and . . ."

"So you can talk to yourself?" Ellen injected.

Wilbur looked startled. "Oh, I hadn't thought of that," he said slowly. He'd forgotten that no one but he ever entered his two hallowed halls! Then he revived. "But this is just an experiment anyhow," he went on cheerfully. "Why, it ought to revolutionize the telephone ind . . ."

"Wilbur," Ellen interrupted firmly, "I don't care what you revolutionize as long as you don't revolutionize it when you're supposed to be having a date with me! Do you realize that you haven't been on time for one date in almost two months?"

"I'll try not to be late any more, Ellen," Wilbur said meekly. "Honest, I'll try." He looked so hurt that Ellen's heart softened again.

"All right," she said. "We'd better hurry to the movies if we don't want to miss the last show."

On Monday Wilbur was supposed to call for Ellen at six-thirty to take her an evening meeting of the high school Latin Club. Promptly at six-thirty Ellen left her house alone. She'd felt a little more assured after Wilbur had made his promise, but in the back of her mind she'd still been prepared for something like this to happen again. So now she wasn't too surprised. She was only more determined to teach Wilbur a lesson.

TUM-E-LIFT IS OBTAINABLE ONLY FROM US.

Wilbur finally arrived at the meeting — forty-five minutes late. He took a seat near the front of the room, then turned around to grin sheepishly at Ellen, but Ellen just smiled coolly and looked away. After the meeting Joe Adams, an old friend of Ellen's, asked her for some help with his Latin, so Ellen suggested he walk home with her. But Wilbur was not to be daunted so easily. He caught up with them before they'd even left the building, accompanied them all the way home, and didn't seem to notice that he was being ignored.

All week long it was the same. Joe came over to Ellen's house a couple of times for more help, and each time Ellen maneuvered a walk to the drug store for a soda so that they could go by Wilbur's house. They walked by four times, but only once did Wilbur see them. And that time all he did was stick his head out of a basement window and yell, "Hi, Ellen! Hi, Joe! Want me to show you what I'm working on?"

"No, thanks," Ellen shouted back as coldly as one could shout.

But still Wilbur didn't get the idea. At school Friday he told Ellen he'd call her at eight that night to make arrangements for the school dance the following evening. Ellen intended to tell him not to bother, but she was so dumfounded by his taking her so much for granted that she couldn't say a word.

Wilbur phoned at nine. That was the last straw! Ellen wanted to say she had another date, but she realized it was probably too late to find another fellow now, and besides the dance was as good a time as any to tell Wilbur they were through. And Ellen had definitely decided to bid Wilbur farewell—unless she could think of something drastic to wake him up before the dance.

All night long she tossed and turned, but the instant she woke up the next morning she had a brilliant idea. Right after breakfast, she hurried over to Wilbur's workshop.

Wilbur glanced up in surprise from a new invention. "Hi, Ellen," he said a little uncomfortably. "We didn't have a date this morning, did we?" Ellen knew as well as Wilbur did that no one, simply no one, was ever allowed in Wilbur's workshop without a definite invitation.

"Why, no, Wilbur," Ellen smiled innocently. "I just decided that I wasn't taking the proper interest in what you're most interested in, so I thought I'd come over and help you today." Wilbur looked at her suspiciously. "Of course," Ellen went on lightly, "I don't know too much about mechanical things or anything like that, but I'm willing to learn. Is this your new simplified telephone?"

Ellen lifted something that looked vaguely like a receiver off something that looked vaguely like a hook.

"No," Wilbur said, "that's part of my new kitchen cabinet opener. As soon as one door is opened, they all open."

"Why don't you show me how it works?" Ellen asked. She tossed the gadget to Wilbur, but before he could catch it, it fell to the floor and separated into its various parts. Wilbur stared at them in dismay.

"I'm sorry, Wilbur," Ellen said, "but we can put it together, can't we?"

"We can try," Wilbur said grimly.

They tried, but finally Wilbur gave up showing Ellen how the parts fitted and put them together himself. Then Ellen insisted on his telling her the function of everything in the shop and demonstrating how all the machines worked. Every time they went on to something new, another disaster would occur. By noontime Wilbur looked very suspicious.

But Ellen came back for the afternoon, and Wilbur had to take more punishment. Finally it was four o'clock and time for Ellen's appointment with the hairdresser.

"I could come back right after supper," Ellen offered, acting very disappointed at the thought of having to leave the shop.

Wilbur thought fast. "What about the dance?"

"Oh, we don't really have to go to the dance, Wilbur," Ellen said sweetly. "All this is so fascinating. Why don't we spend the evening working down here?"

"All of a sudden," Wilbur said firmly, "I'm very interested in going to that dance. Now you run along, and I'll call for you at eight."

"At eight, Wilbur?" Ellen asked innocently.

"At eight," Wilbur promised, looking suspicious again.

That evening Wilbur showed up promptly at eight o'clock, but Ellen didn't appear till eight-thirty. When she did, she asked Wilbur into the kitchen.

"I just wanted you to see this gadget, Wilbur," she said demurely, pointing out a new kitchen implement. "I picked it up downtown this afternoon, and I'm sure we could make one just like it in your machine shop tomorrow."

"Tomorrow," Wilbur said resolutely, "I shall call for you promptly at two o'clock to take a walk. Wouldn't that be better than working in my dusty old shop?"

"Much better, Wilbur," Ellen smiled. Wilbur grinned back, and Ellen knew Round One had ended happily.
